Martha Muir was the daughter of Alexander Muir and Martha Whyte, his wife. She was born on the 15th of April, 1797, in Wester Yonderton, a farm belonging to Lord Douglas in the parish of Renfrew; and at that time held in lease by her father. She discovered, even in childhood, a thoughtful disposition, accompanied with a considerable degree of shyness and want of relish for the ordinary amusements of children. Accordingly, on being put to school, she felt quite unhappy, and had to be taken home. After this, she was taught by her mother. Her lesson book was now chiefly the bible. From it, she usually read a portion to her mother every day; the latter instructing her as she went along, not only in the sounds of words, but also in their meaning; and opening up to her, as she was able...
